The Department of Urban and Regional Planning (DURP) at FSU is Florida’s oldest and largest planning program and is consistently rated #1 in the state.

DURP prepares students to be successful planning professionals from their very first day on the job, developing their analytic and critical thinking skills during their time of study.

DURP curriculum allows students to choose from six planning specializations:
- Building Healthy Communities
- Environmental, Planning
- Land Use and Comprehensive Planning
- Neighborhood Planning and Community Design
- Planning for Developing Areas
- Transportation Planning

DURP offers five joint degrees with Demography, Public Health, Law, Public Administration and International Affairs.

DURP provides real-world learning experience to students through community-based projects and professional internships.

DURP’s award-winning Florida Planning and Development Lab offers students the opportunity to work on projects for clients, gaining applied, place-based professional training that proves valuable in their future job searches and career choices.

DURP has a job placement rate of more than 94% with public planning agencies, private planning firms, and nonprofit planning organizations.

DURP’s alumni network is more than 1,500 strong in almost all 50 states and almost 30 nations outside of the United States.

DURP is situated in the dynamic capital city of Tallahassee in a fast-growing region of the country where planning innovation is encouraged.
